Screwworm is now in Arizona twice

A second New World screwworm case is confirmed in Cochise County. This time it's a domestic horse with no known travel history.

About 45 miles from the first case

The first case was a dog infected in late October. The new case sits roughly 45 miles away, so this is a new location, not the same spot.

A new 20 km Infected Zone

Officials are setting up a 20-kilometer Infected Zone around the new case, with animal movement restrictions and suspended self-inspection.

Livestock movement gets tighter

Spread into a new Southwest location raises the risk of further restrictions on cattle shipments from Mexico.

Takeaway: supply and trade flows

Limited supply and trade flows support US cattle prices. Watch for more movement rules if cases keep appearing.
